Working Mom 5.0 out of 5 stars I have plugged it into my mac and play all my itunes from it, and also have it connected to a projection screen tv. Since I already have all my music digitized, I saw no reason to buy the upgraded model which would digitize all the songs directly onto the Bose receiver. The demonstration I heard in the local Bose store sold me on the system, and when I got home and pulled it out of the box, I had it up and running in about 20 minutes. Basically they give you a headset that is outfitted with little microphones that allows the Bose receiver to listen to what the system sounds like in different parts of the room.

<http://www.drupalitalia.org/node/78372>

It then optimizes the output of the five speakers to make sure the best sound reaches those areas evenly. You pick five places where you think you will watch movies or listen to music from, and you sit in each one for about a minute while the speakers emit weird sounds, and then presto, it is calibrated and you can have perfect sound throughout the room. I was a little skeptical about it until I tried it out, and watched my first movie. It is better sound than any movie theater I have been to. If you have the means to purchase this system and you are serious about sound, I recommend this product without reservation. I also suggest you get the whole Bose system over the speakers and a regular receiver because of the added Bose technology. The speakers by themselves are great but the Bose receiver makes them unbelievable. My wife was a bit miffed at the price, but agrees that the sound is amazing. It has turned our weekly family movie night into a neighborhood event. MWe use it to watch movies etc. So far we have had to send it in twice to BOSE corp for service. The unit just quits working. I could just go by a SONY system for the service call of the BOSE. We tired to buy quality and have been unhappy every since. BOSE should take care of customers without hurting my pocket book in this economy.
